

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

It is a telling tale that so many manufacturers are so bogged down in fear of litigation that they cease to be dynamic and openly supportive of pilot education. With only a few exceptions, it is the smaller, entrepreneurial companies that took a strong, active interest in this book. I urge the reader, whenever possible, to support the above and following companies, all of whom displayed a strong desire to help educate general-aviation pilots. They are willing to help you; please help their businesses grow and prosper.

For reviewing the content of individual chapters I am indebted to the following professionals for taking their time in support of this project: Jonathan Bent, VP marketing for De Vore Aviation Corporation of America; Vincent Marotti, business development manager for AIL Systems Inc.—Dorne & Margolin Antenna Technologies; Debbie Abrahams, inside sales manager and marketing and old friend Joyce Ervin, applications specialist, both of Micro-Surface Finishing Products, Inc.; Frank T. DeAngelo, president of ARC Industries, Inc.; Lou Bissonni, customer service department, Kollsman, Inc.; Shawn Ewing, technical service specialist, Phillips 66 Company; John Thurston, manager of technology and operations, Air BP; Tom S. Johnson, aviation manager—general-aviation sales, Texaco, Inc.; Dick Vincent, AlliedSignal Turbocharging Systems; Gene Martin, general manager, Martin Induction Systems; Michael R. Disbrow, VP marketing and customer support, and Rick Bowerman, chief applications engineer, for Hartzell Propeller, Inc.; Harold “Hal” Haskins, Jr. general manager, Harold Haskins, Inc.; Terry Holburn, VP marketing of Keith Products, Inc.; Pike Kelly, program manager, Dukes, Inc.; Mark Gaulke, technical sales, Rapco, Inc.; Bryn E. Young, senior product support representative, Ice Protection Systems Division of BFGoodrich Aerospace; David Downer, sales manager, Hydraulic Pump/Motor Division of Parker Hannifin; Bruce Moncreiff, manager—hydraulic fluids, Castrol Industrial, Inc.; David Smith, chief engineer, Allenair Corp.

I must continue to thank Vicki Cohen, who for many years put up with my quirks and idiosyncrasies. Rejoicing with me in the good times and helping me through the tough ones, her support helped me make the transition from employed slave to self-employed entrepreneurial slave. “Mom” to our puppies, she is still my closest friend and I will be indebted to her forever.

And finally, I thank those to whom this book is dedicated: Dad and The Nerka. Sir Roscoe of Inverness, affectionately called The Nerka, passed away during the writing of this edition. My best friend and faithful golden retriever of ten years, his passing leaves a huge void in my life and the life of his widow, Molly Inverness. Not a day goes by that we don’t think of, and miss, him. The love and emotional support he selflessly provided all those years can only be appreciated by someone who knew him.

Dad has passed away since the writing of the original book but lived to see it published. I never saw him prouder than the day he saw his son’s name in print somewhere other than the local newspaper’s police blotter where so many expected to see it eventually. Through good times and bad, he always encouraged and supported my every endeavor. No child could have asked for more love, no adult for more approval. Through 10 years of college and countless moves, his timid question was only, “where is this all going?” And finally my answer was, “here.”